This talk about the Constitution and the courts to simple avasion. What is the Constitution, if not occusted? A more parchment. And how can it be occusted, without legislation? Can the courts make liver as well as administer them? The thing is an absurdity. If these champions of squatter-over-eignty are sincere in the unlimited and implicit confidence they profess in the bare judiciary, why do they invoks Congress to enforce the fugitive-slava clause of the Constitution? Does not the slaveholder claim "the safaguard of the Constitution" here, too? Why, then, don't they advise him, in this instance as in the other, to turn his back on Congress and short the courts above? If, in their judgment, it is such a monstrous nearpation for Congress to protect.

Memphis Appeal has the following:
It is generally known that the running arrangements of this road were entirely breken up by the late flood, and that it has been wholly inoperative for several weeks. The road has been greatly damaged by the nvarflow, and the road bed and superstructure are under water nasrly all the distance hence to Madison. In some localities the grades have been washed eway, and this remark applies particularly to the division in the vicinity of the Black Swamp. It seems that the natives over there are disposed to fry the process of levying, as a gentleman of Marion made a levy for $2.3,000 on the concern yesterday for old indehtedness.
